AN OPEN BALLOT DENOUNCED. The Lynchburg Virginian has donned a new dress, which presents it in a very comely itself with modern principles and manners and cast aside its Bourbonism, it would become a more agreeable companion and be on better terms with its neighbors. It is terribly chronic in its political infirmities. It now informs us that the "Virginia "people"-the Bourbons, we suppose it seans-" prefer the honest mode of voting 'eira roce or an open ballot." With those who seek to persecute, prescribe and estracise a class for differing with them politically, such a contrivance for their exposure is no doubt very desirable, and it can scarcely be defended on any other ground, where intolerance is the ruling spirit of those who arrogate to themselves the exclusive right to be regarded as citizens, and who seek to know just how their neighbors vote, that they may arraign them before a tribunal of public sentiment created by themselves and punish by proscription and ostracism. Every citizen is entitled to a vote and to cast his ballot secretly or openly, as it best pleases him, in accordance with his own conscientions sense of duty. That ballot expresses his individual wish. Nobody but himself is responsible for it, nor has any one a right to question it if it is a free-will offering that represents his individual views and opinions, lawfuly expressed. Where there is perfect toleration as to sentiment and action, it matters not whether a vote is given view voce or by secret ballot: but where men are pro scribed in their business and social relations on account of their voting adversely to the wish of that ruling and malign spirit, they are entitled, as an individual safeback to kill physically, while he stabs his guard against persecution, to enjoy the protection of a secret ballot. It is the sacred right of every citizen to vote in accordance with the dictates of his own judgment, and whatever interferes with the free exercise of that right is unlawful and un-

If the Virginian and those who think and act with it would cultivate a more lively sense of toleration and recognize the right of every citizen to form, entertain and exereise his own opinions lawfully upon all matters of public concernment, without intimidation, oppression or interference of any kind, they would aid materially in elevating the tone of our politics, in promoting a better era of feeling between our citizens and sections, and aid in restoring the Nation to unity and peace. The treatment bestowed upon the people of the South, both white and colored, who believe to make a solid North than all thinge else combined since the war; and now that the until the South relaxes its proscriptions and terrorism, and shows works meet for repentance. It will take time and honest fruits to overcome the feeling of distrust that now pervades every Northern State It will take more than a decade, under the most favorable circumstances, for the North to entertain as good a feeling toward the South as was held the next day after its sur render. Under Southern policies it has been growing worse for years.

THE efforts of Republicans to break up the Solid South are now being supplemented by the selfish designs of scheming sorehends among the Bourbous of that section, as well as by the chagrin and disappointment which the Southern Democ-The result has been that every Northern racy at large now feels over the certainty and Western State that has spoken since that they will be called upon in the National the extra session of Congress developed the campaign next year to furnish votes for the support of Northern Doughfaces.
